not the monarch of that name whom Cortex dethroned. It is the generic term of their rulers, like Pharaob, Coasar, &co.

Hefore the flood men lived to a great age, so that they lost their teeth and crept about like children. After a time they would get new teeth, and walk upright again like men in the prime of life. Then it was that the Great Spirit created the mountains and peopled the earth on all sides. Then, too, animals talked like men, and were the first to tell of the approaching flood. About this time appeared Montezuma, who collected a large quantity of gum from a plant called chuchi, and with this gum, which is said to be insoluble in water, and with other materials, he built a large vessel in which he took refuge, closing and sealing the door behind him. In like manner a cayote or prairie dog crept into a large cane stalk and closed the ends against the water. The flood came up to the high-est mountains, and reached even the birds, which cried like men, with fright. When the waters came down, Montezuma and the cayote landed at Cerro Prietta, which mountain some believe to be Montezuma's vessel.

According to another tradition they landed in the centre of the earth, and, having come out of their vessels, Montezuma moticed the trail of a beetle, which he followed until he found the beetle fast in the mud. He then turned back, and meeting the cayote, they embraced each other in grief. Montezuma send the cayote southward to find the sea, which it soon found and returned, when it was sent on the same errand to the northward, but returned intendered.

the sea, which it soon found and returned, when it was sent on the same errand to the northward, but returned unsuccessful. They then lay down to sleep, when Moniezuma dreamed that he should form men and women out of clay, which he accordingly did, making two for each nation. Meanwhile the cayote sat behind him also making men, but the latter were ill-torned, so that Montezuma ordered them to be removed. His own people multiplied rapidly, and built a large city on the north bank of arlver, supposed to be at the mouth of Sait River, in Arizona, where the remains of large ditches are still visible.

rapidly, and bullt a large city on the north bank of a river, apposed to be at the month of Sait River, in Arizona, where the remains of large ditches are still visible.

Montezums next traveled south ward, followed by large numbers of people, in accordance with a dream, he thrust a rod into the earth, and water flowed thence, which is the origin of the springs at Santa Rosa and elsewhere. After a time the Great Spirit appeared the springs at Santa Rosa and elsewhere. After a time the Great Spirit appeared the treat springs at Santa Rosa and elsewhere. After a time the Great Spirit appeared the erreat Sprit. Then the latter arose from the dead by night and repeated the treat Sprit. Then the latter arose from the dead by night and repeated the treat Sprit. Then the latter arose from the dead by night and repeated the request, when Montezums grow angry sysian, declared that he would take his people to heaven by a tower, and killed the Great Spirit appeared to be sween, removing the sun further from the Montezums was living at the Casa Blanco, or white house, close to the Pimo villages on the Gila River. The inside of this house was overlaid with pure gold. A third time he slew the Great Spirit, but the latter now becoming angry, threw is nouse into Spain, which led to an invasion by the Spaniarde. The did Montexum's exercised the Prince did Montexum's exercised to the Pimo villages on the Gila River. The lastes of the latter flew to the finger of the Spanish counters to the finger of the former. Thus did she become legued with the enemy, and when they were out of provisions she prevalled upon her people to throw them tonded instead of arrows, and thus they were dead the conditional transparence of the former. Thus did she become legued with the enemy and the propies of the word the first of a second days and the provisions of the first of a second days and the provisions of the second days and the provisions of the provisions of the second days and the provisions of the provisions of the provision of the second d

Picking and Stealing.

We notice in the English papers the report of the trial of a man employed in a warehouse, for stealing one apple. He was duly convioted and mucted in the sum of five shillings for the offence. This looks like small business, but it is amalier business to be picking and stealing, and the magistrate, in passing sentence, said that this proceeding had become absolutely necessary in defence of the rights of more than one person interested. The property was freight, in charge of common carriers, and if every porter, warehouseman and drayman helped himself, though each only took a single apple, the 'abrinkage' was something very considerable. The transporters being liable for the loss, sought a preventive in the arrest of the dirst man against whom they could clearly prove the theft.

The amount of property wasted in various ways by neity drsf man against whom they could clearly prove the theft.

The amount of property wasted in various ways by petty peculations would bear comparison as to the aggregate with the thefts made in larger lots. It is wonderful how habitually careless many persons are about the rights of other people in small things. 'Portable property' as the satute lawyer's clerk in Dickins terms it, is a precarious possession. If our young people could all be educated with a better idea of honesty in apparent triffes, it would be a branch of education 'liberal' in more than one direction. Some persons having country residences decline to cultivate fruit because they find that having no orchards, and not even a melon patch, is the surest way to escape annoyance. It is more than a vexation, after you have 'read yourself up' in the agricultural and horticultural periodicals, and undertake to produce grand results in a small way, to have night thieves rob you both of your labor and money—to say nothing of the disappearance of that immense pear or wonderful bed of seedling atrawberries, with which you expected completely to astonish and vanquish your neighbor, Smith.—Phil. Ledger.

The Story of the Deluge on this Condition which exists among the Papago Indians respecting Montezoma, there is no other calling which is so much in need of first-class personselleve, never yet appeared in print; at least not in its present shape. It was related by Captain Con Quan, an aged and intelligent member of the tribagand was taken down from his lips by an interpreter for Judge Henry T. Backus, of Arizona Territory, and for line the legend, and has been an eyel with the expension of the legend, and has been an eyel with the expension of the clusted at the cave. He represents the Papagoes as being nominally Catholics, yet clinging to their national traditions with great tenacity, and cherishing the memory of Montezuma with even more than saintly veneration. The tradition of the deluge is interesting in its relation to the origin of the Indians of the country, and especially the anoient tribes who lived in the twilight of civilization, until the Spaniah Christians annihilated them. Did they bring this tradition with them from the Asiatic Conlinent?
